Leadlight - Wikipedia The term leadlight could be used to describe all windows in which the glass is supported by lead, but traditionally and correctly, a distinction is made between stained glass windows and leadlights, the former being associated with the ornate painted images on windows of churches and other such works of architecture and the latter with the windows of vernacular commercial and domestic architecture and defined by its simplicity.

Blenko Glass follows a clear path from past to present ... The designer of the windows was master craftsman Charles Connick from Boston. Blenko Glass is also in the Rose window at Reims Cathedral in France. â€œWhen the Great Depression came, churches were not interested in stained glass,â€• said Mr. Blenko.
