For me, personally, I need at least one window in every room (sometimes two!) and a window in the kitchen over the kitchen sink. A History of Stained Glass | Architectural Stained Glass, Inc. Unlike the dramatic blossoming of stained glass that heralded Gothic architecture's displacement of the earlier, heavier Romanesque style, stained glass in the 20th century has largely failed to take advantage of the new architectural vernacular and its imaginative fenestration of buildings.

Window - Wikipedia Modern windows are usually glazed with one large sheet of glass per sash, while windows in the past were glazed with multiple panes separated by glazing bars, or muntins, due to the unavailability of large sheets of glass. Today, glazing bars tend to be decorative, separating windows into small panes of glass even though larger panes of glass.
